A Walkway Through History

The Labor Legacy Landmark on the Detroit Riverfront is a dynamic symbol of the working people and their unions who built our factories, schools, and skylines.

It honors the women and men who serve us daily in schools, hospitals, and in many fields. It tells our story to visitors through a series of bronze sculptures. And it inspires visitors with our vision of a better world.

Sixty-two feet high, this soaring steel icon and its walkway through history, is the largest work of public art in North America devoted to working people. Quotations from labor pioneers, advocates for freedom, and others are etched in the tiles to help teach us about labor's vision for the future.
